

Camisha Russell (UC Irvine): crussell@hri.uci.edu

Camisha Russell received her PhD in Philosophy from Penn State University in 2013. She currently holds a University of California President's Postdoctoral Fellowship. Her dissertation, The Assisted Reproduction of Race: Thinking Through Race as a Reproductive Technology, which she is currently revising for publication, explores the role of race and racial identity in the ideas and practices surrounding assisted reproductive technologies. The completion of that project was supported by a Charlotte W. Newcombe Doctoral Dissertation Fellowship. Her primary research and teaching interests are in Critical Philosophy of Race, Feminist Philosophy, Bioethics, and issues around Science, Technology and Society. Her publications include "Black American Sexuality and the Repressive Hypothesis: Reading Patricia Hill Collins with Michel Foucault" in Convergences: Black Women & Continental Philosophy, "The Limits of Liberal Choice: Racial Selection and Reprogenetics" in The Southern Journal of Philosophy, and "Thin Skin, Thick Blood: Identity, Stability and the Project of Black Solidarity" in Journal for Peace and Justice Studies. Before attending graduate school, she served as a Peace Corps Volunteer for the Girls' Education and Empowerment program in Togo, West Africa.