We are intentionally creating a collaborative space across distinct communities where students can creatively speak out against police brutality, racial profiling, university injustices, unfair labor practices, homophobia, transphobia, Islamaphobia, and other forms of gendered racisms and oppressions on campus and beyond. This event builds on the Social Justice Initiative's vision to keep the 2011 pepper spray incident in our consciousness as we work to build a more just and sustainable environment at UC Davis, particularly one that is critical of white supremacy and the historical legacies of genocide, slavery, and colonization.

We hope you join us for this social justice centered evening of art, performance, spoken word, testimony, and organizing! Light refreshments will be served at the events.

Collaborators: Social Justice Initiative, UC Davis Race Project, Ethnic and Cultural Affairs Commission, TANA, Asian American Cultural Politics Research Group, Chicana/o Studies Department, Women and Gender Studies Program, African and African American Studies Department, Asian American Studies Department, American Studies Program, and Native American Studies Department
